Tourism Minister Moshe Katsav, who represented the govemment at Rachel's funeral, said that the Palestinian Authority should not expect the government to tolerate terrorist activity. "The Palestinian leadersbip must prove that it wants to and is capable of battling terror," Katsav said. "If it doesn't want to or cannot, it cannot be our partner [in the peace process]." The attack occurred near Moshav Tirosh, only two kilometers from where a similar shooting, which killed Yaron and Efrat Ungar, occurred last month.

Security officials believe the same Hebron terror cell, affiliated with the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, is responsible for both attacks. The government restored a full closure on Judea and Samaria, only days after substantially easing it to allow more Palestinians to work in Israel. Hebron was sealed off and the army set up. roadblocks throughout the area between Bethlehem and Hebron.

On Friday the cabinet got a detailed briefing on the incident from Internal Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani and acting police inspector-general Cmdr. Gabi Last. The cabinet issued a statement after the meeting demanding that the PA take nicasures against all groups involved in terrorism.

"We are demanding that the Palestinian Authority work to stop terror by all terrorist organizations, without any distinction between them," the statement said.

Observers noted that the last clause was significant, indicating the government's belief that the PA was concentrating its efforts against the Islamie organizations and ignoring the secular left-wing rejectionist groups. The two couples were traveling past Beit Shemesh from the direction of the Refer junction when a car passed the Munks' car and opened fire with a Kalashnikov rifle at about 1:15 Friday moming. The Munks' car was riddled with dozens of bullets, police said.

A PIPE bomb ripped through the crowded Centennial Olympic Park in downtown Atlanta early yesterday, killing at least one person and wounding more than 100. A Turkish television cameraman also died rushing to the scene.

It was the first terror attack on the Olympics since 11 Israeli athletes were killed by Palestinian terrorists Munich in 1972.

An emergency telephone call about 18 minutes before the 1:25 a.m. explosion warned of a bomb. The call came too close to the time of the blast to alert police at the park, though officers there already had begun clearing the area after finding a suspicious

"The government of Israel expresses shock at the attack. The prime minister sends his condolences to the government of the United States and to the American people." a statement issued by Netanyahu's office last night said. "Terror has no borders and it must Netanyahu's office said he intended to get in contact with Clinton soon concerning events in Atlanta.

The FBI said it was searching for a while, American male who bad telephoned emergency police operators with a threat before the blast ripped through the Olympic Centennial Park where thousands of fans were enjoying a late-night rock concert.

FBI special agent Woody Johnson told a news briefing that the explosive consisted of at least one pipe bomb contained in a knapsack with nails and screws.

150,000 haredim protest at Rehov Bar-Ilan

SOME 150,000 haredim filled Jerusalem's Rebov Bar-Ilan yesterday for a three-hour demonstration to demand the street's closure on Shabbat, police said. The protest was mostly peaceful, until police tried to reopen the road to traffic and hundreds of haredim who refused to leave the street clasbed with police. Two border policemen were lightly hurt by stones and two haredim were arrested. At 4 p.m. police began blocking off Rehov Bar-Ilan and adjoining roads, including Sderor Eshkol, the road to the Ramot neighborhood, and the Sanhedria junction. Police refused to allow residents of those areas who were coming from elsewhere in their cars to return to their homes. Some 400 meters from these roads, police also erected barricades to prevent secular pedestrians from coming close to the demonstration.

Thousands of haredim protest at Jerusalem's Rehov Bar-Ilan yesterday.

Shortly after the roads were closed, haredim began pouring into the area. Among those who joined the protest were the Gerer rebbe, Rabbi Ya'acov Alter, and Deputy Housing Minister Meir Porush (United Torah Judaism). While there were few incidents during the demonstration, a group gathered at the barricades near the Sanhedria junction threw empty bottles and rocks and spit at police. There were occasional shouts of "Shabbes" and "Nazis" from the crowd. A large amount of the shouting was aimed at Jerusalem police chief Cmdr. Arye Amit, who was at the scene to monitor the situation. At the beginning of the demonstration, police arrested a Meretz activist who managed to make his way into the demonstration area.

At about 7 p.m., the protesters began leaving the area in an orderly fashion. Thousands remained at the Sanhedria junc-tion, however. After the end of Shabbat, a representative of the Eda Haredit rabbinical court called on the group, using a police megaphone, to leave the area. Most of the remaining protesters left, but the several hundred who refused to leave began throwing stones at police. They then pushed a large trash container onto the road and set it alight in an anempt to block uraf-

Police declared the protest ille-gal and used force to disperse the group. Police managed to reopen the road to traffic at around 9 p.m. A total of 1.000 policemen were involved in the operation. Gov't to Arafat: Close Jerusalem offices

THE government demanded on Friday that the Palestinian Authority's youth and sports and cartography offices, working out of Orient House in eastern Jerusalem, should be closed,

Israel Radio said. The radio added that Foreign Minister David Levy, who made the demand of PA President Yasser Arafat, also told him to close an institute for professional training situated in the Shuafat

The report came as US peace process coordinator Dennis Ross began a meeting with Arafat in the Gaza Strip.

Levy passed the demand to Arafat on Friday afternoon. The radio did not say how the demand was communicated.

Levy also demanded an end to operations of PA security forces in Jerusalem and that Palestinian Legislative Council members not open offices in the capital. Faisal Husseini, the top PLO official in Jerusalem, told Reuters he had not heard of the Israeli demand. But he said: "These offices do not belong to the Palestinian Authority."

Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu intends to reiterate to Arafai the demand that all PA activity in Jerusalem cease immediately, and will draw up a detailed list of PA violations of the Oslo Accords with regard to its activity in the capital, including the recent kidnapping to Ramallah of Abed Salem Hirbawi.

At Friday's cabinet meeting, Netanyahu said of the incident, which ended with Hirbawi's release last week, "He was released following a decisive ultinatum that we would take serious steps if he wasn't released. We will not accept such recurrences in the future."

THE prime minister's bureau chief. Pinhas Fischler, has asked to be relieved of his position and is expected to step down this week.

Fischler, who handed in his resignation to Binyamin Netanyahu, said: I will not allow the media to attack the prime minister through me." Netanyahu requested that he reconsider his decision but his resignation is considered final.

Fischler, a Tsomet activist, was brought to the prestigious post by ministry director-general Avigdor Lieberman. But he soon became the target of numerous unfavorable media reports. According to the reports. Fischler has several times had criminal files opened against him and some of these are still pending. He was also accused of being unable to stick to a job because of poor work relations.

Officially, Netanyahu continued to give him backing but numors of his impending resignation were published even before the prime minister left for Washington. Sources in the Prime Minister's Office have so far (lúm) refused to confirm the resignation.

ISRAEL and Syria are still far apart on a possible peace agreement and "no one should have any illusions" about progress in the near future, US Middle East envoy Dennis Ross said Friday.

Despite the differences, however, the two sides are still interested in negotiating a peace agreement, he said,

"It will be a long process." Ross said after a meeting with Foreign Minister David Levy. "No one should have any illusions that we are just around the corner of a breakthrough. But the reality is that there is a desire from everyone I have spoken to to find a way to produce peace and they do not see an alternative to it." Ross said.

"It is the recognition of the absence of an alternative and the commit-ment to go ahead that gives me a basis for hope," he added. Later on Friday, Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu met with Ross for a further meeting, US Ambassador Martin Indyk also attended the meeting where participants discussed the continuation of the political process in both the Syrian and Palestinian spheres.

Netanyahu emphasized that Israel expects the Palestinian Authority to act against terror and to fulfill all its commitments concerning Jerusalem, and to other matters, his spokesman said later.

Following the meeting, Ross met with Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai and from there left for Gaza.

Reuter reported. Lithuania will oot press for further compensation, the news agency said.

In what was called a "humanitarian gesture," Germany offered DM 2 million several years ago to each Baltic republic for old-age facilioes for Nazi victims.

During the three years of negotiacons, which ended Friday, Lithuania's Jewish community argued that Germany should pay individual compensation. Bonn countered that Jewish survivors had received compensation when Germany paid reparations to the former Soviet Union. However, the Lithuanian Jews said, only a few survivors got funds - a lump sum of DM 1,000 - from Moscow lası year, Reuter reported.

Earlier this year, survivors in a neighboring Baltic state, Latvia, objected strenuously to a comparable German proposal for geriatric institutions. Bonn pays monthly disability pensions to Latvian veterans of the Waffen SS, though the gheno and concentration camp survivors get nothing. The survivors wanted individual compensation, in the same manner as Jewish survivors who live in the West. They also protested the German plan on the grounds that their oppressors also would be considered "victims of Nazi persecution."

"We would never live in an old age home alongside former members of the SS, whose units killed our families and tormented us," Alexander Bergmann of Riga wrote in an open letter to German President Roman Herzog. Chancellor Helmut Kohl and to the Bundestag.

insists he will not leave Pale, his mountain stronghold outside Sarajevo, despite strong pressure from Washington and Belgrade, a source close to the Bosnian Scrb leadership said.

The source, insisting on anonymity, said Karadzic was asked to leave Bosnia and move to his native Montenegro, the tiny republic that remains in the truncated Yugoslav federation with Serbia.

Karadzic told a closed session of leaders of the Bosnian Serbs' ruling Serbian Democratic Party this week that he will not leave Pale, the source said.

Montenegro's President Momir Bulatovic said last month he would not allow Karadzic into his republic where his mother still lives. But Bulatovic might accept this if asked by Belgrade and Washington.

The plan to have Karadzic leave for Montenegro was reportedly agreed to in talks last week between US envoy Richard Holbrooke and Serbian President Slobodan Milosevic.

Billy Payne, president of the Atlanta Committee for the Olympic Games, said no one had ever recommended to him that security for the park be tightened. The Justice Department official said the call came from a pay telephone about two blocks from the explosion. The caller spoke "in a calm voice," the official said. The call, apparently from a man, was received at 1:07 a.m. and the caller said only that a bomb would explode in Centennial Park venues on the day of the games' glamor event: the 100-meter in 30 minutes, a law enforcement official said. The caller did not give a name or identify any group or organization claiming responsibility for the bombing.

Johnson said authorities believe the caller was "a white male with an indistinguishable accent." He refused to say if the caller said why the bomb had been planted. Investigators at the scene found nails and screws that were part of the bomb, a federal law enforcement official said. The official. said the nails and screws probably were placed there to produce shrapnel to harm people. Officials had hoped to re-open Centennial Olympic Park yesterday. But Johnson later said it would remain closed indefinitely.

opposition headquarters stormed

POLICE stormed an opposition party headquarters before dawn yesterday, arresting supporters of Indonesia's pro-democracy leader and sparking the worst anti-government rioting since 1965. As many as 10,000 protesters throwing stones attacked police and soldiers who responded with clubs. Fire gutted a sevenstory government huilding, two double-decker buses and cars. Other buildings were damaged

The violence erupted after police broke up a sit-in at Indonesian Democratic Party headquarters by supporters of Megawati Sukamoputri, who is fighting official efforts to remove her as party leader. The clashes highlighted President Suharto's hard line against growing calls for more political freedoms in this vast nation of 200 million people that he has ruled for more than 30 years.

Megawati, 49, is the daughter of the late President Sukarno, deposed by Suharto io 1966. Although she doesn't pose any immediate threat to Suharto's power, he apparently is afraid that the support she enjoys because of her father's enduring popularity could chal-

Dozens of people were injured as Megawati's supporters fought the pre-dawn takeover of her party headquarters with stones, bricks and fists, witnesses said. As many as 200 people were reported detained.

About 2,000 activists who arrived after the raid threw stones and pushed through police lines around Democratic Party beadquarters, but were dispersed by officers with clubs. Some were trampled.

Police smashed windows and tore down the steel gates and fence of the one-story party headquarters in an elite neighborhood that also is home to Armed Forces Chief of Staff LL Gen. Suyono. The yard was littered with broken glass and stones. Posters of Megawati were torn down.

About 100 injured people took refuge at the nearby headquarters of the Indonesian Legal Aid Foundation, a human rights group. 'ernment and Suyadi, her would-be replacement as party leader.

"It is obvious that the government supported Survadi and his followers," she told The Associated Press.

There were scattered reports of deaths, but none could be immediately confirmed. Both Jakarta military commander Maj. Gen.

Sutiyoso and police district Chief Abubahar Nataprawira denied there were any deaths. A senior Megawati aide, Sutarjo, denied a news report quoting him as saying 48 people were dead or seriously injured.

WUHAN (Reuter) - Fierce rains battering China have killed more than 100 people in southwestern Sichuan province, raising the death toll nationwide to more than 1,600 after weeks of devastating floods, officials said yesterday.

In central Hubei province, hundreds of thousands of exhausted troops, police and volunteers lined dykes holding in the rain-swollen waters of the Yangtze near the provincial capital, Wuhan, on guard in case Asia's longest river burst its banks Flood control officials in Chongqing in Sichuan province said tomential downpours this week had küled 31-people and left 27 missing, ruising the death toll from storms, since mid-lune to more than 100. "There is no expansion of the disaster area and the floods are receding," one official said by telephone. The new report of deaths raised the toll from devastating floods in recent weeks across vast swathes of central and southern China to more than 1.600.

An official in southeastern Fujian province said Typhoon Gloria, which hit the coast early yesterday after tearing across the Philippines and southern Taiwan, was unlikely to cause significant damage or heavy rains because the storm was weakening gradually.

"We are now carrying out safeguarding work such as protecting unsafe houses and barring windows," he said .- . Officials have warned of further deaths and damage if more flooding occurs and as the annual typhoon. season begins.

Estimates of damage throughout many areas, officials said there chief task now was to clean up the debris and to disinfect while preventing outbreaks of epidemic diseases.

About 4.5 million people stranded by flood waters in central Hunan province were extremely short of food and very hungry, prompting emergency deliveries of tons of biscuits, rice and mineral water by boat to victims, one local official said.

"Some people are close to starv-ing," he said. "The most important operation oow is to provide flood victims with tents, food and medicines.

S. Korea slides kill 50

SEOUL (Reuter) - Landslides and floods have killed about 50 people, mostly soldiers, and left thousands homeless in northern South Korea after tomential rains over the past two days, government officials said yesterday.

A Defense Ministry statement said landslides killed at least 22 soldiers yesterday in addition to 20 troops who were crushed to death while sleeping in their barracks on Friday.

It said five army divisions had been affected.

Nineteen of yesterday's victims came from the 15th division, stationed . in the Cholwon area in the mountainous eastern province of Kangwon province, along the tense border with North Korea.

Earlier an army spokesman had reported about 60 buried when a landslide hit a 15th division unit near the border, but the figure was later revised to 26. Of those eight were killed and 15 pulled alive from the rubble and taken to hospital. Three were still missing.

BARLEBEN (AP) - Two vacationers received minor injuries yesterday in the latest of a series of clashes involving right-wing radicals that have plagued campsites in eastern Germany this summer. One of the group of 15 neo-Nazis, who ranged in age from 15 to 24, also was slightly injured, police said. Nine were arrested and police said they knew the identity of the other six. Prosecutors were considering charges of causing serious bodily harm, disturbing the peace and using banned Nazi symbols. Police said the 15 right-wing youths chanted fascist slogans during the fight with campers at Lake Barleb near Magdeburg in Saxony-Anhalt state. Authorities in eastern Germany had stepped up patrols of camping sites after a series of highly publicized attacks by gangs of neo-Nazi vouths on campers.

The most serious occurred July 12, when dozens of drunken skinheads rampaged through the campsite of a Christian youth group in northeastern Mecklenburg-Western Pomerania state, injuring six people. Officials have blamed the violence in part on the area's 15 percent unemployment rate - almost double that of western Germany - as well as high rates of alcohol abuse and the social dislocation caused by German unification.

But the head of the Central Council of Jews in Germany, Ignatz Bubis, said he believed social factors were not the main problem. In the weekend edition of the Berliner Zeining newspaper, Bubis said less than 10 percent of the neo-Nazis who have committed violent acts in recent years in Germany were unemployed.

Both twins are still alive today," he says. But since the first immunosup-presive drug to fight rejection - 6mercaptylpurine - was developed only in 1959, transplants before then could involve only identical twins with the same immunological makeup. Additional anti-rejection drugs were developed, but all are toxic. "You have to walk a fine line between rejection and toxicity," he notes. Less-toxic drugs are in development, and these can ease the long-term problems of organ recipients. The next organ to be transplant-ed was the liver, in Denver and in Cambridge (England). The first heart was transplanted (by Dr. Christiaan Barnard) only in the late Sixties. The delay was due to the brain-death issue. "It had long been accepted that people died only when their heart stopped but we needed to have the heart before it stopped beating," says Shumway. Most Western countries now accept the death of the lower-brain as death, but this debate still condoues in some of them. "Japan, which one regards as technologically advanced, still doesn't recognize brain death, and it was accepted in Sweden only a few years ago."

Unlike Israel, where for the time being only a living firstdegree relative may donate a kidney or part of his lung or liver to a patient who needs it, in the US, "anyone may donate for altruistic reasons. But no money may be involved," Shumway says. "This prevents the commercial sale of organs that exists in India, the Philippines and other Third World countries. There were even reports of Turks being brought in to the UK to supply kidneys."

There are 160 heart-transplant centers in the US, and three in Israel, "We in the US need only a third as many, and in Israel you should have only one, but there is much pressure on the health authorities, as it is regarded by taken human genes and inserted them into pig ova. The resulting piglets are born, and their hearts are transplanted into baboons. But the technique does not eliminate all types of rejection, and the primates have survived for no more than a week. "Unul they survive for much longer, they won't be able to consider trying the procedure out on humans."

Artificial hearts are also not ideal for patients who need a transplant. They require a heavy battery that must be carried over the shoulder, make a lot of noise and heat and are not convenient. Artificial hearts can be used to supplement diseased hearts and give them time to get stronger, but only in some patients. Sull, there are a few patients with only an artificial heart who say they are grateful. They have no alterna-

Thus, for the time being, human organ donation is the only answer. "I'm in favor of mandated choice - everyone must have it registered in his driver's license, for example, if he is willing or unwilling to donate organs. Another possibility is that the government assumes a patient is willing to give if he doesn't specifically register as opposing it. This exists in a few European countries, but would never be accepted in the US - or Israel, for that matter."

Advances in organ transplantation over the past four decades have been breathtaking, concludes Shumway. Every organ is transplanted today - except for the brain. Even parts of that allimportant organ might be transplantable, such as certain tissue to cure neurological diseases like Parkinson's, he says. But no one contemplates transplanting whole brains - for obvious reasons.

A plot was planted at Kibbutz Sha'ar Hanegev as well, supplying two kilos of the active ingredient needed to make a white-powdered sweetener.

Researchers in various parts of the world have developed processes to extract this ingredient, but Ikan and Crammer say their method is the best they know for processing. The method was atented by Yissum, the universi ty's research-and-development arm. The two chemists note that getting approval from the US Food and Drug Administration for marketing of stevioside as a food additive is a long, uphill battle. Although stevioside has been found in extensive tests not to be carcinogenic or toxic, when it mixes with acids in the stomach. its metabolite (called steviol) is mutagenic (can produce genetic mutations). But this, says Ikan, "does not mean it causes cancer. Coffee and cola, for example, are mutagenic as well. The Delaney amendment to the American Food and Drug Laws that restricts use of food additives bars carcinogenic substances, but not mutagenic ones." The use of Stevia leaves as a dietary supplement has been approved for the US market by the FDA, but not stevioside itself. This sweetener, which has been used for many years in South America and Southeast Asia with no ill effects, has been approved for sale by the health authorities in Japan and other countries in the Far East. Ikan and Crammer together with Avishai are planning to introduce a genetically modified plant that might be especially rich in Rebaudioside A. effort investigating the properties of natural plants indigeoous to her country. With the demand for a non-fattening, stable, sweet and safe food additive so great among the overweight, dental-cavity ridden and diabetics of the world, the company that discovers such a sweetener will be very rich indced.

Attraction to sweet foods is innate and can eveo be seen in newborn babies, says Prof. Raphael Ikan, who chaired the symposium and has worked for nearly 20 years on sweeteners at the Hebrew University's department of organic chemistry. The tongue has taste receptors for sweetness, bittemess, saluness and sourness; as most of the sweet receptors are at the tip of the tongue, and the others 10 the sides and at the back, just a lick of ice cream is enough to stimulate the love of sweetness. Dr. Bernard Crammer, cochairman of the symposium and an organic chemist who is deputy superintendent of patent examiners at the Israel Patent Office, adds that in nature, poisonous substances are most likely to be bitter. Taste thus probably serves as a warning mechanism to animals (and humans) against eating dangerous things (there are a few exceptions, such as lead acetate, a poison that is actually sweet). Sensitivity to bitter things is much greater than to sweet things, so the concentration of sweetness must be considerable for it to be appreci-

Sodium cyclamate was also

Ikan notes that there are various types of natural sugars: glucose (grape sugar); fructose (fruit sugar) and sucrose (cane and beet sugar), as well as honey, which is frequently menuioned in the Bible. The existence of cane sugar was reported by a disciple of Aristotle in the third century BCE. Its original source was apparently New Guinea on the shores of the Pacific Ocean. From there it was brought to Asia and India and then to China 200 years later. It reached Europe only during the seventh century, and the people of Portugal cultivated it as a crop in the Madeira Islands. Unul the middle of the 15th century, sugar was enjoyed only by kings and counts, says Ikan. Queen Elizabeth I had a bad sweet 100th, carrying candy around in her pockets, and suffered from serious cavities.

There are also synthetic sugars, such as sorbitol and maltitol, and completely artificial sweeteners, including saccharine, cyclamate and aspartame. Each of these has its benefits and disadvantages. Saccharine was discovered by

A team from the bospital's cardiology department reported recently on a 28-year-old Druse man who was bitten by a snake as he sat to rest under a tree in the Golan Heights. He was admitted to the hospital with severe pain at the site of the bite on his right arm, but an electrocardiogram also showed serious irregularities, which were confirmed by enzyme counts in blood tests. millions.

HE Olympic myth of a peaceful world wishful thinkers at the Olympics who make enjoying fun and games just blew up with a roar in Atlanta. The one-world theme so beloved of speechmakers at the games is a world none of us lives in any more, if it ever existed.

We live in a world being slowly closed in by security checks, iron gates and fear of flying. A random survey of the last 10 days of world news reveals more than a dozen terrorist actions across the globe and takes no account of scores of other terrorist campaigns in progress but tentporarily dormant or just being plunned.

Terrorism increasingly is the world war of our era, and it is getting worse, moving inexorably to what experts call "the big one" - the entry of nuclear or chemical blackmail to the scene. Tokyo has suffered the world's first mass chemical terrorism in its subways. France this weekend commeniorated the random bombings of the Metro a year ago. The United States is sull reeling from the second worst-ever aviation disaster which looks increasingly like a mirror image of the Lockerbie terrorist outrage.

While still inconclusive, the TWA Flight 800 bombing raises growing suspicions of Islantic fundamentalism. The bomb in Atlanta already has the feel of native, right-wing terrorism. Without prejudging the investigations, one may wonder what it means if these conclusions prove correct. There can be little in common between such polar opposite groups, any more than there is anything in common between Ireland's IRA, Spain's ETA, Sri Lanka's Tamil Tigers or Peru's Shining Path.

What it does mean is that in an increasingly fragmenting and confused world, there is a growing number of angry people who conclude that bombing their ideas into the international headlines is the only way to get them ue lear noticed. This may seem surprising. Like the terror.

Peace with security

PRIME Minister Binyamin Netanyahu was . elected on the slogan "Peace with security." The callous drive by shooting in the early hours of Friday morning; which killed Uri Munk and his daughter-in-law Rachel, and left Munk's son Ze'ev critically wounded, provides an early and unwanted first test of the premier's policies. The terrorists' timing – the incident occurred only days after Foreign Minister David Levy met with Palestinian Authority leader Yasser Arafat in Gaza and on the same day US envoy Dennis Ross briefed policymakers here on Syria's stance on future peace talks - cannot have been coincidental. The vicious gunning down of an innocent family, inside Green Line Israel, is a stark remunder that the smiles and the handshakes of diplomats and leaders have not eradicated the deep-seated and fanatical opposition to Israel's existence among some of this region's residents. Unfortunately, this reminder was not the first of its kind. Just over a month ago, in almost the same spot, Yaron and Efrat Ungar were mowed down in a similar drive-by attack, orphaning their two small children. Security officials believe a Hebron-based cell belonging to the Popular Front for the Liberation of Palestine, whose headquarters are in Damascus, is responsible for both these attacks, as well as one in January in the Hebron area that killed an army

With the country entering an era of prosperity and advanced Westernization, the public has become somewhat estranged from its Zionist purpose. And so the new aliya lobby must garner the best available experts to form a task force to address the solid issues faced by new immigrants, and an immigrant protection authority modeled on a combination of the State Comptroller's Office, the Consumer Protection Authority

The government can't tax the stock market, or stop lavishing billions of shekels on employers to help them out with their payroll taxes, either.

That would hur business, and business would fire workers and cut their salaries, and we want to protect workers.

This is the render heart of supply-side, trickle-down economics. This is the humanitarian impulse behind US Republican policy, and behind the policy of the Republicans' favorite foreign leader.

basis he made these remarks.

Kahalani should also examine police deployment procedure last week with a particularly critical eye. Whenever a closure ends - and last week the five-month-old closure that followed this year's wave suicide bombings was substantially eased - the chances of a terror attack increase. One hopes last week's internal police bickering over Kahalani's criticism of the Jerusalem police force did not divert attention away from police plans for dealing with the easiog of the closure.

The government, so far, has reacted to the killings in a similar fashion to its predecessor. A closure was immediately slapped on the territories and a demand made of the Palestinian Authority to step up its fight against Palestinian terrorism. In his election campaign. Netanyahu scoffed at such measures, saying they had proven ineffective. Before more innocent blood is shed, he must demonstrate that there is more to his leadership than slogans.

There is no question that immigrants are in urgent need of legal assistance and systematic civics lessons, on consumer protection laws for example.

to need a lot of dummies to take the place of all these foreign workers someday.

THIS IS the kind of social and economic policy the US has been running ever since Ronald Reagan came into office. It plays very well with the Americao middle class, not to mention the rich. It is the policy of choice among ambitious, hard-charging people everywhere, including Israel.

What these people don't want to admit, though, is that supplyside, trickle-down economics has devastated America.

There are millions of homeless people on the streets of that country - a lot of burns, some psychopaths, but mainly functional people who are literally begging to work. Until the 1980s, they at least had homes.

Among the developed nations of the world, the US is in a class by itself in homelessness, poverty, crime and drug addiction. It is a socioeconomic atrocity.

And the more unmanageable that country becomes, the less Americans want to invest in managing it. Nobody wants to pay taxes and nobody wants to help anyone. It can hardly be called a society at all.

But that's America - where the individual is asked little aod given little, where he can rise as high or fall as low as he may, and no one will stop him at either end.

Israel is supposed to be different. Even if we observe this principle much, much more in the breach, we are supposed to look out for one another. We aren't supposed to take from the poor.

A great deal is asked of individuals in this country, mainly that they spend much of their lives defending it. But Netanyahu even wants to slash away at grants for demobilized soldiers.

Our prime minister is a big one for patriotism, for Israeli solidarity, for keeping that sense of "us" in our minds. But he practices an economics that achieves the opposite.

Of the world's 25 or so industrialized nations, Israel is said to have the second-widest income gap between rich and poor. Only America's is wider. But we're catching np.

'TZIPORI LIVE' Sir, - We were most appreciative of Haim Shapiro's coverage of the "Tzipori Live" living history production at Tzipori National Park. We fund his description accurate and felt that he captured the spirit of the program.

However, we want to correct an important omission: "Tzipori Live" is the product of the creative initiative of Jerusalem dramatist and educator Joyce Klein, who conceived. wrote and directed the program. SOAP OPERA

Sir. - The nullification of the PLO Covenant has been the subject of a running controversy between Misha Louvish and other readers in the Letters Column of The Jerusalem Post. This has taken on the character of a soap opera and there are probably readers who await each episode with bated breath. There are also others who feel that this is presently an academic question whose resolution will become apparent in the course of time.

I respectfully suggest that those interested in continuing this debate use the telephone, the mails, or The Jerusalem Post home page on the Internet which is quite suitable for this purpose. In this way, the limited space of the Letters Column can be used for more practical and thoughtprovoking topics. Ginor Shomron, JAY SHAPIRO

- Too many reporters are simply nit-pickers, constantly harping and carping at Mr. Netanyahu. We have a new prime minister who has been democratically elected. Why can't all these "writers" get behind Mr. Netanyahu and give him some encouragement and show the world that we support his new government, even if there are people who didn't vote for him? He needs all the help he can get in the "fight

Sir, - In his letter published on July 19, Misha Louvish points out that the PLO Covenant was changed by virtue of Arafat's statements of 1988 and 1993 and as a result of the recent PLO decision that nullifies certain provisions. WAGNER'S MUSIC Sir, - According to your report of

As long as one survivor remains to whom the sound of that music evokes painful memories of horror. we willingly deprive ourselves of Wagner's strident glorification of the Herrenvolk. There are enough works which remain by great composers - antisemitic or otherwise. BETTY MISHEIKER

INSENSITIVITY

Sir, - As a North American Israeli citizen, I am outraged by the manner in which you covered the "obscene

The fact that you chose to cover the issue by not only printing the word in full. but including a photograph of the sign, reflects a disregard for the expectations and sensibilities of your readers - people like me who come from the cultural background that finds the word extremely offensive. Your insensitivity is, in my opinion, inexcusable, and disappointing in the extreme.

Clear choice for Dole V.P. emerges

A review of commentary and human from American Press Syndicates

BY ROBERT NOVAK

t is not known precisely what U.S. Republican presidential candidate Bob Dole thinks about Pennsylvania Governor Thomas . Ridge as his running mate, but he has become the clear choice for vice president by Dole's staff.

One top Dole campaign official is putting out the word that Ridge has emerged from nowhere to reach the top of the VP list, and for now, there is not even a close second. Ridge is being pushed by Don Sipple, Dole's top media expert, and Jill Hanson, political ditector for the campaign. The candidate's schedule has been crafted lately to make sure he was seen in public with Ridge.

Ridge, an obscure 12-year congressman before heing elected governot in 1994, is the least well-known among Republicans around the country of all the vice presidential prospects. Once the party's conservative activists focus on his pto-choice abortion position and his frequent congressional votes against former President Ronald Reagan's policies, his selection could generate trouble.

CLINTON'S TEST

Whether President Clinton signs the Republican-drafted welfare reform bill will be a test of influence by campaign strategist Dick Morris, who wants to preempt the most populat GOP positions.

Democratic Party leaders, both in Congress and around the country, are appalled that Clinton would even contemplate approving a measure that ends welfare as an entitlement. Passage in the House Thursday drew only 25 Democratic members.

With Clinton well ahead in the presidential polls, old-line Democrats are not protesting publicly. But they have converted word to the White House that the president should avaid abandoning the party's base in following Morris' designs.

THE JERUSALEM

S. Reform Party candidate Richard Lamm has won high marks from editorialists for going after "sacred cows." But candor and boldness are not always useful attributes in a polincian. It depends on what the issue is, and whether the politician is right or wrong about ir. Winston Churchill on the Nazi peril was one thing. Richard Lamm on the U.S. Social Security is quite another.

For the last decade, Lamm has warned that Social Security in the U.S. is "heading for bankruptcy." "Social Security will create insecurity for America's children," Lamm declared July 9 when he announced his U.S. presidential candidacy. Social Security for Americans "will be broke when my children retire," he intoned last June. Lamm also frames the issue as one of "intergenerational equity." "Public policy," be maintains, "sbould oot blindly transfer money from the young to the old."

Lamm says he is offering a "no B.S. agenda to the American people," but his pronouncements on Social Security - like those of other doom savers - are almost entirely B.S. Is the U.S. Social Security going bankrupt? According to the U.S. Social Security Administration, the program will run a surplus for the next two decades, which will reach $3.1 trillion in 2015. The American baby-boomers retiring will then force it to draw on that surplus to meet annual expenses. If nothing is done to raise revenue or reduce benefits, social security will incur a deficit in 2030. That's thirty-four years from now! And if American's sit on their hands for seventy-four years, the program will incur a deficit of 2.2 percent of payroll per year. Sure, that's a problem. But compared to, say, the solvency of the Medicare fund, it's a manageable one.

The eventual deficit could be met, as former U.S. Social Security Commissioner Robert Ball bas proposed, by increasing the Social Security tax 2 percent (1 percent each on employees and employers) in the year 2050 and by allocating 40 percent of the trust fund to equity purchases rather than to lower-interest Treasury bills. Or it could be met now by raising the payroll tax on employees and employers 1.1 percent each. If all the problems were this dire, the U.S. Congress would only have to meet several months a year.

Is Lamb right that Social Security unfaitly transfers wealth from young to old in America? That an unconscionable act of intergenerational inequity is taking place? Look at its origins. In the nineteenth century, most Americans lived on or near farms io large, extended families where costs they worked less rather than retired. By the 1930s, Americans were living longer, living in smaller families in cities and working in other people's factories and offices until, if they survived past 65, they were forced to retire. Unable to count on their extended families, they sometimes became victims of poverty and of the powerlessness borne out of physical and mental deterioration.

Lamm's 'no B.S.' Social Security agenda

The U.S. adoption of the Social Security Act in 1935, and its subsequent amendment, didn't just dramatically improve the lot of older Americans. It also improved the lives of their children by freeing them from the financial and emotional responsibility for taking care of their parents when they became unable to work. If anything, Social Security places undue burden not on the younget generation, but on their parents, who become responsible not only for bringing up their own children (an unfunded liability!), but also for funding their own retirement through Social Security taxes.

Lamm may be attempting to slay sacred cows, but his immediate target is old people in wheelchairs.

Lamm argues that Social Security recipients in America are making out like bandits. "The rate of return earned by today's tetirees would make a loanshark blush," Lamm wrote in 1987. "The average retiree gets back his or her payroll taxes, plus tax-free interest, four times over from Social Security, and ten times over from Medicare." That's nonsense. The first generations of Social Security recipients naturally received more in benefits than they put in, but subsequent generations have increasingly put in about what they have drawn out.

Lamm and other critics of Social Security cook the figures by leaving out employer contributions and not counting what retirees would have received if they bad kept their money in interest-bearing accounts. Assuming a 3 percent annual rate of return, Dean Baker of the Economic Policy Institute calculated that when an American who worked for forty-five years at average wage retired in 1994, he and his employer would contribute sixteen years to his income under Social Security. That's about how long he is expected to live.

Lamm also argues that Social Security trans- @ 1996, The New Republic were shared among generations. As they got oldet, fers money from the young to the "rich elderly." He's on only slightly firmer ground here. As Joseph Quinn and Olivia Mitchell of the U.S. Social Security Advisory Commission write in The American Prospect, Social Security "delibetately transfers resources from those with high lifetime earnings to those with low lifetime earnings." In 1996. American's monthly eatnings up to $437 translated into 90 cents of monthly benefits for each dollar. Earnings between $437 and $2,635 yielded only 32 cents fot every dollar, and earnings above that only 15 cents.

Lamm, of course, is not the only person warning that the U.S. Social Security system is about to collapse or that the young are being robbed. He is joined by other American thinkranks and lobbies funded by the Investment Company Institute, the Securities Industries Association and other trade associations eager to make a killing from the system's privatization. But Lamm's hysteria is different from either the profiteers or from his fellow wotry-wonks. He seems to resent the money and attention old people are receiving.

Lamm has repeatedly displayed a wanton callousness in his remarks about old people that he hasn't shown toward any other group. He became notorious in 1984 for saying old people have "a duty to die and get out of the way with all of our machines and artificial hearts and let the other society, our kids, build a reasonable life." He claimed later he was quoted out of context, but his wrigings are rife with similar statements, often involving malicious exaggeration. In 1990, he lamented that "thousands of times a day some terminally ill person is brought back to life so that he or she can die tomorrow at great cost to the American taxpayer." Lamm also betrays a lack of compassion for the elderly poor, complaining that "programs designed specifically for the poor are being slanted toward the elderly." The U.S. Medicaid's funding of nursing home care is "symbolic of how our limited resources are being taken away from the majority of the population." Would he prefer to toss the elderly poor out on street?

Lamm is not a stupid man. Many of his policy pronouncements - on trade, immigration, even on aspects of health care spending - are worth considering. His views on the aged, however, are not simply ill-founded but unfeeling. He may be attempting to slav sacred cows, but his immediate target is old people in wheelchairs. His candor should not be applauded but jeered.

WHERE WAS RUMMY?

With Dole's campaign in the dumps, policy co-director Donald Rumsfeld went to New Mexico for a weeklong vacation recently, irtitating Dole insiders.

A formet U.S. Congressman, White House chief of staff and secretary of defense, Rumsfeld emerged from some eight years of political silence to become a full-time adviser to Dole. While keeping a low public profile, he has been prodding Dole toward an aggressive economic policy behind the scenes.

Consequently, when Rumsfeld took off for New Mexico, it was a signal around Washington that the Dole campaign still has not reached a state of urgency.

INDICT LINDSEY?

Expert courtroom observers in Little Rock see the line of questioning taken Tuesday by federal prosecutors as an attempt to trap White House Counsel Bruce Lindsey into committing perjury in the second Whitewater trial.

Lindsey, one of President Clinton's oldest and closest political confidants, has been listed as an "unindicted co-conspirator" in the trial. But there has been speculation that Whitewater Independent Counsel Kenneth Starr might later seek an indictment of him. Prosecutor W. Hickman Ewing appeared to be maneuvering Lindsey to contradict himself under oath about the alleged conspiracy to finance Clinton's 1990 campaign for governot of Arkansas.

The opinion of trial-watchers was that while Lindsey did not hurt himself with the testimony, he did nothing to help Arkansas bankers Herbert Branscum and Robert Hill, the defendants in the conspiracy trial.

DISAPPOINTING LOTT

Conservatives who had expected happy days when U.S. Senator Trent Lotr replaced Bob Dole as Senate majority leader were badly disappointed when he called up the chemical weapons treaty for ratification.

Lott shares the right wing's belief that the rreaty's provisions cannot be verified and tepresent a disaster for U.S. national defense. Lott now is hoping that 34 senators will vote no to block the two-thirds vote needed for ratification of the meany, a result he could have had if he simply refused to bring up the issue.

Lott called up the treaty in order to get Democratic senators to stop blocking the Defense Department's authorization. Nobody is really interested in that bill except Senate Armed Services Committee Chairman Strom Thurmond, who wants to take credit for its passage to help his tough campaign for te-election in South Catolina. Thurmond asked Lott, and the new majority leader said yes.

U.S. Correct to Oppose Canada's Cuban Enterprises

an Delancy's kids won't be going to Disney World this year. Dad's company, the Canadian metals firm Sherritt International, runs a nickel mine and processing plant in Moa Bay, Cuba, that belonged to Americans before Fidel Castro nationalized it. Under the new Helms-Burton Law, Delaney is considered to be trafficking in stolen U.S. property. As punishment, be can't cross the bordet. Nor can his wife and children.

Should we feel bad about this? Yes, say The New York Times and other high-minded critics of Helins-Burton: The new law, the paper laments, runs "counter to normal American standards of conduct" and "offend[s] the sovereignty of America's closest allies." Canada, Mexico and Europe are crying foul, threatening retaliatory sanctions of theit own. American trading partners, along with American foes of Helms-Burron, also contend the law (like the U.S. trade embargo itself) deprives Cuba of liberalizing concect with the outside world. If you want democracy, they say, start with capitalism.

But Sherritt's example, and that of other Canadians who do business in Cuba, shows that these foreign operations in Cuba are a caricature of competitive capitalism. Their impact is anything but subversive. Rathert they reinforce, Castro's grip on power, just as American banana companies once bolstered the compradot elites of Central America. What's really offensive is the moral obruseness with which the political and business elites of Europe and Canada view Castro's dictatorship, and the sanctimony with which they exploit Helms-Burton to vent cheap anti-American sentiment. When Canadian investors come to Havana, they don't shop around for partners among the Cuban populace at large; the avetage Cuban can't own private property, much less engage in ventures with foreigners. All deals are negonated with the government, often. with Fidel personally. No competirive bids, no internacional tender offers in The Economist, just a nod from the man in charge - much as Fulgencio Barrista used ro cut backroom deals with U.S. Sugar in the Havana of the 1950s. The Canadian government sometimes discreetly greases the. wheels. Take the case of York Medical, Inc., an Ontario-based firm established recently for the express purpose of marketing Cuban-made drugs and medical equipment. Last year, Canada's foreign-aid agency paid travel and other costs for a representative of the firm to meet in Havana with Cuban biotechnology officials. The trip included a meeting with Castro at the Canadian Embassy arranged by former Prime Ministet Pierre Elliott Trudeau --an "advisor" to York Medical whose relationship with Castro dates to the Trudeau government's opposition to U.S. Cuba policy. Saskarchewan's government invested almost $250,000 in York Medical and further subsidizes it by testing Cuban diagnostic equipment in a provincial public hospital. Cuba's Foreign Investment Law forbids Cubans from going to any foreign-owned mine ot botel to ask fot a job. Nor, of course, are there free Cuban labor unions to bargain fot the workforce collecrively. Rather, Canadian companies agree in advance to hire their Cuban workers through the Cuban national employment agency. which is controlled by the Communist Party — and vets workers for political loyalty. Simon Cooper, a Canadian hotelier on the island, told The Globe and Mail that he makes sure not to be "perceived as contracting directly with individuals [or] encouraging a free market in any way."

So much for liberalizing concact. What's more, Canadian firms don't pay Cuban workers directly." They give the employment agency a per-worker fee --- in U.S. dollars --of which the vast majority is pockered by the Castro regime. The Cuban state-run Geominerca enterprise, for example, gets $2,700 per month for each Cuban geologist employed by Canada's MacDonald Mines. (MacDonald is developing gold deposits from which the Cuban government could realize. half of all profits.) The geologists ger 350 Cuban pesos from the government --- less than $10 at black market exchange rates. Foreign firms must set aside a modest number of dollars for "incentive" payments to workers; but this doesn't nearly make up the difference.

Delaney, the largest Canadian investor in Cuba, may be the most egregious beneficiary of this cozy system. In September 1990, he engineered a hostile takeover of Sherritt and its shuttered Alberta hickel refinery. The plans had gone bust for lack of a cheap source of raw material. Meanwhile, the Soviets were pulling out of Cuba and Castro was stuck with his own moribund nickel ore mine: Moa Bay, which the U.S. firm Freeport Sulfur built fot $75 million, only to have it nationalized in 1959 and run into the ground by Soviet and Czech advisers. In January 1991, Delancy flew his corporate jet to Havana and cut a deal on the mine with the comandante en jefe. Along with millions in working capital, Delaney brought a certain appropriate political sensibility ro the table. Of Castro, he has said: "You don't keep his job by being a repressive dictator. You keep his job because you have a deeply felt sense of national pride and unity. He's charismatic, charming, a terrific listener whose depth of knowledge is very good." Sherritt's investments have brought Moa Bay back up to the level of production Freeport once envisioned. Cuban nickel output climbed from 26,000 tons in 1994 to 44,000 tons in 1995. Castro's regime profits from its share of the $16 million annual payroll at Moa Bay. It also gets half the earnings - $26.6 million in 1995 - from sales of finished nicket made by Sherritt's refinery in Alberta, Before his U.S. visa was revoked, Delaney said he planned to invest $165 million more in Cuba over the next five years. He is buying into hotels and recently paid Castro $10 million for oil deposits claimed by a U.S. firm. Cuban workers at Canadian firms are, to be sure, treated a, bit better than those who drudge away in the domestic Cuban economy. Sherritt gave miners with overalls hard hars, steel-toed boots and new washrooms. The company also claims to be investing in an environmental deanup of the Moa Bay operation, though residents have told the Canadian press of stinging rust-colored smoke pouring from the plant's chimneys and metal-laced mine run-off flowing into the bay.

Nevertheless, Canadian investors in Cuba sound defensive about their participation in a labot system no Canadian worker would tolerate for five minutes. Just as Castro's apologists cite Cuba's allegedly bountiful social services to mitigate Castro's political repression, so Canadian businessmen invoke Cuban welfarism to rationalize their exploitation of cheap, government-supplied Cuban labor. Cooper, for one, told The Globe and Mail that Cuba is "2 cradle to grave socialist country that takes [care] to one degree or another of all the needs of its people. I wouldn't presume ro judge the degree to which the population is or isn't exploited."

AMERICAN OUTLOOK

Delancy, too, poses as a protector of Cuba's egalitarian status quo. "If we were paying them directly, would it be better?" he mused to The Globe and Mail You can have a long, long social debate about that ... if we went in and put all the employees on a dollar wage, it would destroy the social fabric of Moa Bay. You would have a two-tier society and that's not in our interest." Ian Delancy is not one for long, long social debates. As the Toronto Star put it, "doing business with a dictator has been a rewarding personal and business experience." "I only have two responsibilities," he told the paper. "That is to keep the balance sheet solvent, and get the strategy right." " Trying to contain the ire of " Canada and other Western governtments, the Clinton administration said it will postpone implem tation of some Helms-Burton provisions, pending a campaign to convert the allies to its cause. One idea is to apply to Cuba a version of the Sullivan Principles the code of humane conduct U.S. businesses adhered to in South Africa during apartheid. It's hard to see how any democratic government could object to this, though they'll probably try. President Clinton got tough on Western subsidization of Castro only after the Cuban air force shot down two Cuban-American civilian planes in international waters last February, threatening to make Cuba an election issue in 1996. But Clinton's lonely stand is the right one, whether he himself believes in it or not. Helms-Burton may not be the most surgical instrument. Certainly it's not the most diplomatic. But throwing Cuba open to Ian Delaney and his ilk is no solution, either. When it comes to dealing with Castro, it is the U.S.'s northern neighbors who occupy the moral low ground.

Gulf War: Why Class Divisions Threaten Democracy

BY MICHAEL WALZER

and a star In . 1 erouge for much of the last decade, academic and public debate has focused intensely on whether multiculturalism --- sometimes interpreted as healthy pluralism, sometimes as frightening division ---- is leading, in Arthur Schlesinger's words, to the "The Disuniting of America." But lost in the arguments over race, gendet and immigration is the threat to American culture posed by a different division: the one between rich and poor. A recent U.S. Census Bureau report reveals that in 1994. the last year for which complete data are available, the richest 20 percent of Americans earned close to 50 percent of the country's total income while the poorest 20 percent earned only a little more than 5 percent. Though we've come to treat such news as inevitable, it isn't. The free movement of capital, labor and commodities obviously makes for inequality, but not for the gulf we now see in the U.S. While inequality has been increasing for the past twenty-five years, before that it declined for several decades. And the reasons for both the recent increase and for the previous decline are more political than economic. The modestly increasing egalitarianism of American society in the 1940s and '50s depended on what John Kenneth Galbraith called "countervailing power." A key example was the power of the labor movement to counter corporate America's search for profits. The development of this balance. Galbraith wrote forty-four years ago in American Capitalism, is a "normal economic process." But Galbraith recognized that, to succeed, countervailing power requires the intervention of the state. Wotkers organize naturally to strengthen their market position, but they will just as naturally be repressed by owners and managers unless they receive polinical protection. Today's income inequality in the U.S. stems from a dramatic loss of such protection. Despite a recent spate of good publicity stemming from the AFL-CIO's effective attacks on Republican congressional candidates, labor's influence remains in deep decline. Former U.S. President Ronald Reagan's 1981 replacement of striking air traffic controllers ctippled the effectiveness of strikes, and their frequency has declined substantially in recent years. U.S. President Clinton's unfulfilled 1992 campaign promise to outlaw the hiring of replacement workers norwithstanding, the federal government remains indifferent to labor's plight. Labor's weakness has made possible a series of aggressive campaigns --- first by the Reagan administration, and now by the Gingrich

Congress --- on behalf of greater inequality. These campaigns ---- which combine a celebration of the free market with attacks on government regulation, federal welfare entitlements and the progressive income tax --- combine theory and practice in ways that would have made the old left envious.

American business's need to remain globally competitive is part of the reason for these campaigns, but, more importantly, it is the rationale. No doubt, the new global economy poses a hard question: How much room to maneuver do national governments have in regulating their economies and providing welfare services? But the example of our European and Asian competitors, who face the same pressures to cut public spending, suggests there is, given the political will, at least room enough to avoid the kinds of inequality now developing in the U.S. Third World standards (sweat shops, unenforced safety rules, intensified discipline on the shop floor, loss of health insurance, lower wages, and so on) are not being imposed on American workers to "save" their jobs. The imposition has at least something to do with the prospect of Third World fortunes for nists, environmentalists, Christian rightists, and so on. But the media's homogenization of American life, and the resulting decline of distinctive working class cultures, means that material interests and egalitarian ideals are difficult to defend today, difficult even to represent . coherently. Hence the general decline in political participation in the U.S., especially at lower educational and income levels. What follows from this decline is uncertain, but one possibility is populism of a kind that has long been absent from American life: a frightened, angry and disorganized mass periodically mobilized by demagogues, cult figures and tinhorn charismatics. This kind of populism, perbaps foreshadowed by Pat Buchanan, Ross Perot and Louis Farrakhan, is the product of a certain sort of inequality: where the differences are radical, where they are not mediated by strong middling groups, where the "lower orders" are without their own institutions or habits of collective action. So inequality is dangerous for liberal democracy. And the dangers are cumulative: disparines of wealth make it difficult to organize countervailing powers, and the absence of countervailing powers makes for increasingly radical disparities. The long-term effect of this process, the characteristic product of radical inequality, is tyranny in everyday life: the arrogance of the wealthy, the humbling of the poor. America is not there yet, but the stigmatizing of "welfare mothers," the challenge to universal entitlements like Medicare and Social Security, the drift toward means-tested, welfare programs ---- these are early examples of social tyranny. That there is so little resistance to these trends suggests that Americans are already feeling the cumulative impact of inequality. Democracy is at risk when the fellowship of citizens resonates so weakly, when we are so unready to come to each other's aid. Yet the U.S. still has a fairly strong economy; a multitude of voluntary associations and social movements, large numbers of politically competent men and women, a basically liberal state with constitutional protections for dissent and ptotest. There is still fundamentally decent politics. What the U.S. Census Bureau report means is that all of it is at risk. And there is a general paralysis in the American political system when it comes to addressing it. I am nor sure about specific policies, but it might begin by reviving the theory and practice of countervailing power.

So what do Jews have to fear? We can just say no. If a Baptist can persuade a Jew that his salvation is in Jesus, so be it. If a Jew can persuade a Baptist to convert to Judaism, so be it. That is the American way. Are we, as Jews, so insecure in the power of out ideas.

our faith and our God that we are afraid of a little healthy competition? To the contrary, there is probably nothing better than a good fire and brimstone sermon from a born-again Baptist to solidify the determination of a wavering Jew to return to his or het tradition.

Jews today do have a problem, but it does not come from other religions trying to convert us. It comes instead from our children choosing to abandon their religious heritage, not in favor of some other religion, but in favor of general assimilation. We have d 12 failed to educate our children to appreciate their heritage. Our enemies are not Christians seeking to convert us, but rather our own lethargy. The Baptist resolution may, in an ironic twist, help keep more Jews Jewish.

So let the contest begin. Historically, few Jews have ever b

Jews need not fear conversion efforts

By Alan Dershowitz

Then the U.S. Southern Baptist convention recently adopted a resolution calling for a major campaign to convert the Jews. the frightened reaction of some Jews made me think I was in Spain at the time of the Inquisition. As a committed Jew. my response to the Baptist announcement was "go ahead and try." I have no fear of conversion efforts by any church - so long as they do not have the power of the state behind them.

The Jewish fear of conversion campaigns is understandable. in light of the long history of forced conversions by churches which had the power of the stare, the law and the army behind them. The state must remain entirely neutral in the bartle for souls.

Even when threats of physical violence were not used, laws which discriminated against Jews were often the impetus behind conversion. Benjamin Disraeli could not have become the prime minister of England if be had remained a Jew, since the law of England required officials to be Christian. This process of conversion for career advancement was best exemplified by a story involving a famous Russian professor named Chwolson, who was asked why he converted from Judaism to Russian Orthodoxy. He responded "out of conviction." "What conviction?" be was asked. He answered, "out of the conviction that it was better to be a professor in St. Perersburg than a Hebrew teacher in Shklop."

Today in America, there are no state-imposed reasons for conversion, U.S. law bars discrimination on the basis of religion. The high wall of separation between church and state prohibits the state from helping any church to secure converts.

The stigmatizing of "welfare mothers," the challenge to universal entitlements like Medicare and Social Security, the drift toward means-tested, welfare programs --- these are early examples of social tyranny.

American owners and managers.

Galbraith describes countervailing power as a feature of American capitalism. It is better described, it seems to me, as a feature of liberal democracy, a political order that systematically limits the use of power. The limits work in the market only if they work in state and society as well. They depend upon civic responsibility and popular liveliness as much as upon entrepreneurial invention.

The kind of inequality toward which America is drifting will make it harder to sustain a responsible and lively public. With rare exceptions. men and women do not enter the political arena as individuals, on their own. They come in parties and movements, organized for a purpose. defending their interests and ideals. There are still groups like that: femi-

The announcement of the Baptist efforts to convert me and my co-religionists made me once again appreciate the importance of the separation of church and state. If an established church in a country with no wall of separation bad announced a campaign of conversion, then there would be cause for concern. But in America there is no need to worry, precisely because we have a high wall of separation between government and religion. Here in the U.S. we are free to educate our children Jewishly, to teach them bow to resist the importunings of other religions, and to choose for ourselves - without any pressure - what to believe. Every American - whether Christian, Jewish, Muslim, Buddhist, agnostic or atheist - benefits from the high wall of separation. No religion which is confident in the truth of its message should need the state to. promote its Gospel. Let the marketplace of ideas and faiths remain open and let the state stay out entirely of the business of competing for souls.

10 Commandments (part II)

ontinuing with the 10 Commandments of Photography:

ON CAMERA DAVID BRAUNER

5. Honor thy negatives and thy prints, that their days may be long.

Recently I interviewed a lovely gentleman concerning a photographer relative. When it came time for him to show me a picture of his late brother, he produced a disorganized collec-tion of envelopes with unmatched prints and negatives, and slides held together by rubber bands.

Clearly, organizing a lifetime of family snap-shots and holiday pictures requires precious time and effort. So, busy folk look at newly processed pictures once, perhaps send one or two to friends or relatives, and then relegate the envelope to a drawer.

But at certain quiet times in our lives - for instance, during extended holidays or over a rare long weekend with nothing on TV but sports and old movies - organizing stacks of old photos can be a pleasing, even comforting pastime.

Prepare for this time by at least writing the date and a few details (names of people, ages, places, occasions) on the envelope you get back from the photo finisher. Number the envelopes for easy reference. Keep two or three empty photo albums in stock.

Consider sorting your collection in ways other than strictly chronological. You might try subiects - a separate album for close family, another for relatives and friends, and yet others for places, events, pets, and so forth.

Choose only the best pictures, in the sense meaningful to you, for preservation in your albums. Note the negative's envelope number on the back of each picture so you can find the negative if necessary. And last but not least, enjoy looking at your album once in a while. The pleasure is yours.

6. Thou shalt not use thy camera indiscreet-

The camera is an invasive, indeed, intimidating tool. Many people simply do not like having their picture taken. Children and even animals can easily be upset by someone pointing a camera at them.

Veteran photo reporter Dr. Nahum "Tim" Gidal, now 86, recalled photographing a Hassidic wedding in Jerusalem 66 years ago,

"I knew the rabbi wasn't happy about my being there, but our eyes met and he understood that I was just doing my job," he said. "I saw the Observation teaches the photographer to recognize simplicity. Separating the one or two important elements from among the constant flow of visual stimuli is what makes a good picture.

"These drafts connect you with the artists - their thought processes, how songs evolved," Bishop says. "Most people, when they're writing, don't think it's important.

"When the Magna Carta was being signed, they knew it was going to last. But most of what's written today, you don't think it'll be permanent when you're writ-ing it. So I wanted to make sure these were preserved."

Bishop undertook the project in 1992 when, his arm in a cast, he was unable to play guitar for two months. "I just decided it must be fate," he says. He began calling friends and acquaintances looking for what he calls "the little acoms from which the tall oak trees would grow."

He includes one of his own drafts in the book - "On and On," perhaps his best-known song. The first line goes: "Down in Jamaica they got lots of pretty women. Steal your money, then they break your heart."

The original went: "Feed you mangoes, then they break your heart."

"I think it was the right move to change that," Bishop says dryly. The variety of the songs included in the book underscore what a

Mexico and in South America, have become very popular pets in recent months. Unfortunately an awful lot of them are suffering and dying from improper care. Staff at the Jerusalem zoo report seeing numerous half-dead iguanas. and responding to their owners' pleas for help. Iguanas are not as difficult to keep as some other exotics but they do require specialized care because they have some very specific requirements.

Since most iguanas are sold while still hatchlings (or at most a few months old), most people put them in a terrarium that is far too small. A well-kept iguana will, by the age of two to three years, grow to a length of two meters, including tail. So, right from the start. living quarters adequate for a full-size iguana are needed. The terrarium should be long enough to accommodate a 2m. lizard with enough width to allow it to turn around comfortably. It is also a good idea to put the terrarium on wheels so it can be taken out to a balcony for the iguana to sunbathe. The bottom of the terrarium should be lined with newspaper, or preferably with rabbit-food pellets. It can be spot-cleaned - if a bit of pellet sticks to the food and gets eaten, it's not harmful, but just more digestible vegetable matter. But cat litter and the like are thermometer.

Other than that iguanas have only three basic needs. The first is temperature. The terrarium should be kept at a constant tem-perature of 30° to 32° by day and 24° to 27° at night. One also needs a heat lamp at one end (outside the terrarium) for basking, and a large smooth stone under it is a good idea. The lamp can be turned off at night.

is not filtered through glass. But the temperature must not rise above 32°, so provide a shaded area at one end of the tank. If it is not possible to provide direct sunlight then a full-spectrum lamp should be provided for basking – a simple ultra-violet lamp is not adequate. Otherwise the iguana's bones will not grow properly. The only other consideration is diei. The iguana should get a daily salad of lenuce, Swiss chard and parsley. Be sparing with spinach as it interferes with calcium metabolism. In addition bite-size (according to the size of the lizard) pieces of carrol, sweet potato, apple, banana, orange, red peppers such as gamba, cucumbers, grapes, mel-ons and unsprayed red rose petals may be given to it. Do not give it cabbage or any of the cabbage-family vegetables such as broccoli or cauliflower.

About 5-10 percent of the dies should be protein. This can be kibble dog food soaked until soft, chopped hard-boiled egg or boiled, skinned chicken.

With proper care, the iguana should grow to be a majestic creature that will live 12 years or so.

Pakistan leads England by 217

LONDON (AP) – A 136-run opening partnership between Saeed Anwar and Shadab Kabir yesterday helped Pakistan take command of the first Test against England at Lord's.

After a first innings 340, the tourists finished the third day on 162 for three with an overall lead of 217, having dismissed England for 285 in the second session.

Anwar (88), Kabir (33) and nightwatchman Mushtaq Ahmed (5) were dismissed in the last 45 minutes of play as England finished the day fighting.

England began the day with an 80-run fifth wicket partnership between Graham Thorpe and Jack Russell which clawed the home side back into the match after being 200 for five at the end of the second day.

But in the last 16 balls before lunch England lost four wickets for nine runs to be 269 for nine. Thorpe, who brought up his 19th half-century in Tests with his fifth boundary off Wagar Younis, was dismissed on 77 after edging a rising Ata-ur-Rehman delivery onto his stumps, making it 260 for six. In Rehman's next over. Dominic Cork edged the Pakistani seamer to Anwar at third slip and then Wagar bowled a trademark swinging yorker to trap Ian Salisbury lbw in the next over.

US ends

AMERICA'S swimmers grabbed a world record and the last gold in the pool on Friday with a thundering men's 4x100 meters medley victory that gave the US a clean sweep of the Olympic relay titles. Ensuring the spotlight stayed on the Georgia Tech Aquatic Center until the last moment, the US medley quartet touched in three minutes 34.84 seconds, beating the world mark of 3:36.93 that the Americans set at the 1988 Seoul Olympics.

The hosts won all six Atlanta relay titles and 13 swimming golds overall, helping to put them at the top of the medals table ahead of Russia.

To add to the excitement, US swimmer Amy van Dyken beatChinese world champion Le Jingyi to the women's 50 meters freestyle and won her fourth gold. Australia's Kieren Perkins retained his 1,500 meters title with an outstanding performance after only just qualifying for the final.

In other action, North Korean teenager Kye Sun, muscled in on the action with a sensational win over Japan's seemingly unstoppable Ryoko Tamura to take Olympic gold in the extra-lightweight event on the last day of the judo.

In the opening athletics event, Ecuador secured its first Olympics medal of any kind when Jefferson Perez won the men's 20-km walk. Randy Barnes, who missed Barcelona because of a doping ban, woo the men's shot for the US. Elsewhere, weightlifter Pyrros Dimas of Greece was ecstatic. The Albanian immigrant destroyed his rivals with three world records to win the light-heavyweight class. One of only 13 lifters to have won two Olympic golds and a rare showman in the sport, he whipped the audience into carnival mood with his antics after realizing with his first lift he was going to retain his 1992 title. American Jewish track star recounts how Germans weren't the only antisemites around

SIXTY years ago, during Adolf Hitler's showcase Olympics in Berlin, the coaches assembled the US track team and announced that two athletes would be dropped from the 400-meter relay team that day.

A preposterous reason was offered. The American team was the heavy favorite, but the coaches said it had to be strengthened even more because there were rumors that the Germans had some powerful sprinters in hiding. This argument sounded lame and phony, however, for the two runners dropped were the only Jews on the US track team: Marty Glickman and Sam Stoller. Glickman, now 78, told his story at a seminar earlier this month that served as a prelude to a special exhibition at the US Holocaust Memorial Museum on the 1936 Olympics. The exhibiuon opened last Friday, coinciding with the opening in Atlanta of the 1996 Olympics.

According to Glickman, who became a renowned sportscaster years later, black American track star Jesse Owens did not want to take the place of any of the dropped runners in 1936.

'Coach, I've won my three gold medals," Owens pleaded. "I'm tired. I've had it. Let Marty and Sam run. They deserve it."

But, said Glickman, assistant coach Dean Cromwell admonished Owens: "You'll do as you're told." The Germans never produced any secret weapons. Owens won his fourth gold medal, lead-ing the relay team in a world record time that lasted 20 years. But there is no doubt in Glickman's mind that the original relay team could have won the gold medal.

Glickman, speaking to a packed audience, said the decision to pull him and Stoller off the relay team had been made by Avery Brundage, who ran the US Olympic Committee and then the International Olympic Committee for many years.

"He was an American Nazi." said Glickman, "and he wanted to spare Hitler and his entourage the humiliation of secing Jews (receiving medals) on the podium."

The exhibition makes clear that much of the pageantry of the

STANLEY MEISLER WASHINGTON

Olympics these days had its origin in the Berlin Games. Hitler and his propaganda chief, Joseph Goebbels, wanted to associate Germans with the classical athletes of ancient Greece, and the Nazis originated the idea of athletes carrying the Olympic torch in relays until it finally reaches the Olympic Stadium.

The International Olympic Committee had awarded the games to Berlin in 1931, two years before the Nazis took over Germany. When Hitler came to power, he was lukewarm about the Olympics until Goebbels convinced him that the event could be turned into a propaganda triumph for Nazi Germany. The government spent S8 million on the Berlin Games. setting the pattern for lavish outlays by host cities.

Some groups tried to organize a boycott of the 1936 Olympics. A few Jewish athletes, such as sprinter Herman Neugass of Tulane University and hurdler Milion Green of Harvard University, decided not to go. The Long Island University basketball team, heavily Jewish, turned its back on the Olympic trials. But Brundage, in a narrow vote, managed to persuade the US Olympic Committee not to boycott Berlin.

Germany did win the most medals at the Games, but the 18 blacks on the US team caused the most sensation, winning eight gold, four silver and two bronze medals - almost a quarter of the total American haul. A Nazi newspaper, according to the exhibition. denounced these Americans as "black auxiliaries," implying their victories should not be counted in the US total.

Stories have circulated that Hitler refused to shake hands with black athletes who won gold medals. In fact, for whatever reason, Hitler did not shake hands with any of the medalists. A Willard Mullin cartoon in the old New York World-Telegram shows Hitler muttering, "Ach, maybe iss gute t'ing I keep mine han's in der pockets," while a graceful Jesse Owens races off with four gold medals.

Hitler decided that Germany must be on its best behavior, and numerous antisemitic street signs were removed for the duration of the Games. John Woodruff, the black American who won a gold medal in the 800-meter run, said that he eocountered no discrimination in Berlin.

His problems occurred afterward. While his University of Pittsburgh track team prepared for a meet with the Naval Academy in Annapolis, Maryland, in 1937, the Navy coach told the Pitt coach that his players would not compete against blacks. So the Pitt coach ordered Woodruff, the Olympic gold medalist, to stay home in Pittsburgh.

"That let me know what the situation was," Woodruff says on a videotape in the exhibition. "Things hadn't changed. Things hadn't changed."

The Americans said that they did not understand the ecormity of Nazism while they were in Berlin. When they marched around the stadium and set eyes on Hitler for the first time. Glickman said, many of the US athletes had the same thought. "He looks just like Charlie Chaplin." Glickman said that the athletes saw Hitler as a comic figure who would not last very long, "just like the tin-pot dictators of South America.

A different view of the 1936 Olympics came from Margaret Lambert, a German Jewish high jumper who was known as Gretel Bergmann in those days. The Nazis ordered her to train for the Olympics, she said, because they wanted to convince the Americans that they were not discriminating against anyone. Once the American athletes set sail for Europe and there was no longer any chance of a boycott, the Nazi government dispatched a letter to Lambert.

Although she had equaled the German record in the high jump. the letter insisted that she was not doing well and would be dropped from the team. This official notfication closed with a "Heil Hitler!" Museum officials said that the exhibition would be on display in Washington for a year and then would go on a worldwide tour, ending in Melbourne, Australia, for the 2000 Olympics.

ble snapshot, its shining momeot, Kerri Strug's gritty vault Tuesday night is the leader in the clubhouse. In terms of drama, surprise, athletic courage, national celebration, it's going to be hard to beat. Especially by Strug herself, now that torn ankle ligaments forced her out of Thursday's all-around competition and have kept her out of two event finals beginning today.

Bud Greenspan, the award-win-ning Olympic fummaker with the senumental touch, had five cameras on Strug when she fell, jumped again on her bad ankle, collapsed to her hands and knees and was carried to the gold-medal podium by her coach, Bela Karolyi.

"It was marvelous," Greenspan said, "Bela carrying her in and all that. It was better than good. It was like a bad movie, like a bad script. If you wrote that script, they'd throw you out of the office. It's like things we've done where we have to document the stuff; people think I make it up."

Greenspan was reminded of Japanese gymnast Shun Fujimoto, who in 1976 broke a leg at the knee during floor exercises but went on with the rings competition anyway, adding a brokeo kneecap to his misery on that dismount. Greenspan was reminded of New York native Al Oerter, despite a chronic disc injury and torn cartilage in his ribs, winning the third of his four gold medals in the 1964 discus while shot up with novocaine, wearing a neck brace and wrapped with ice packs and tape. Greenspan was remioded of Tanzanian John Stephen Akhwari, who finished the 1968 marathon more than an hour after the rest of the field, hobbling in the dark on a badiy bloodied leg. Compared to Strug's performance, those profiles in courage were done in relative secrecy. Atlanta officials have estimated a worldwide television audieoce in the billions, and the gymnastics arena here, with more than 32,000 fitting into the gym side of the Georgia Dome, is the largest in Olympic history.

Yet in spite of huge corporate involvement and the presence of many millionaire athletes, Strug won't get rich off this deal. An 18year-old high school graduate from Tucson, Arizooa, she previously turned down monetary offers connected to her sport so she will be eligible to compete in college gymnastics when she enters UCLA this fall.

Meanwhile, the two torn ligaments in Strug's left ankle, suffered seconds before her heroic leap to seal the US women's team gymnastics gold medal, may have ended her Olympics just as it was beginning. Team doctors treated the ankle with ice, electrical stimulation and compression in hopethat she somehow could rehabilitate the ankle.

Strug seems destined to be Atlanta's singular moment, just as Mike Eruzione was Lake Placid's, Ben Johnson was Seoul's, Mary

Decker was Los Angeles's, Nadia Comaneci was Mootreal's. Strug's father, Burt, called her "a national hero."

Exactly how Greenspan will treat the heroic Strug struggle as he pieces together the official Olympic film over the next few months, he wasn'l sure. But be expects, when he has a long talk with her, she will react to his spectator's wonder the way all the others have. "Fujimoto was surprised I would ask why he kept going," Greenspan said. "Al Oenter's reaction was the same. He said, 'You're in the Olympics and you've got a chance; you die before you don't take that chance." Most speciators don't understand: This is their job; it's what they do. They don't think it's that magnificent. John Stephen Akhwari said, 'My country didn't seed me here to start the race; they sent me to finish the race. It's a different psyche these people have."

That's why Orecasy have to make this staff up. (Newsday) That's why Greenspan doesn't

But by the time the scoreboard flashed the standings. Israel was a surprise entrant due to the unannounced disgualification of Great Britain and Portugal for early starts.

The coaches in the stands and the swimmers at poolside hugged each other in exultation.

The Israeli team had Thursday predicted a spot in the final provided they improve their speed slightly and executed their transfers flawlessly. Indeed, in the morning heat, Israel beat out every other finalist for transfer quickness.

After the final, breaststroker Alexseyev, who placed sixth in for the Soviet Union in Seoul in 1988, hobbled around the warmup pool. He had taken massage therapy following the morning heat for recurring back problems.

In the preliminary, Bruck shaved a huge 1.63 seconds off the individual 100m. he swam earlier in the week.

While Israel is not a swimming power, the team "succeeded, and that's a tribute to those involved," Bruck said.

"This will contribute a lot to Israeli sports." an uplifted Bruck said afterward. "I hope swimming catches on ... the same way judo gained momentum after [two Olympic medals in] '92,."

As for their future plans, Bruck is undecided. Kutler will begin business school in Israel, Orback heads this fall for Alabama's Aubum University on a swimming scholarship, and Alexsev is likely to retire.

athlete thing. This is your husband talking. It's time for you to go."

Joyner-Kersee might still compete in the Olympic long jump, which begins Thursday. She won that event's gold medal in 1988 and the bronze in 1992.

"In terms of the multi-events, she's proven enough," said Kersee, adding that the athlete - not her coach-husband would make the decision about the long jump. "In 72 hours, she's going to be preity much ready to go out there with a wrap and long jump. The long jump is her baby."

Jearl Miles, 400-meter runner for the US, was in the starting blocks for her heat when the announcement was made about Joyner-Kersee's withdrawal.

"I don't want to call her the grandmother of track and field, but I've heard of Jackie Joyner-Kersee ever since I've been in the sport," she said. "She's someone to look up to and I'm very sorry she can't compete here.'

The line of grim-faced spectators snaked past the entrance gate and up the road where shuttle buses COUNSELING/HEALING dropped people off. By the time rowing started in the FOR A HEALTHY BODY & a happy mind, have a protessional massage or shiatsu. Tel. 03-5602328. morning's events - after a moment of silence was observed for those dead and injured - only half of the spectators had entered the stands. At the beach volleyball venue in Jonesboro, about 25 miles from downtown Atlanta, all matches were moved to the 9,000-seat main court to streamline security. Some matches had been scheduled for a 3,500-seal court nearby. Ticket holders who could not be seated at the stadium court were given the option of either getting a refund or exchanging their ticket for one to the closing ceremonies. The bomb exploded at about 1:25 am (EDT) as thousands of revelers were celebrating at an open-air rock concert in the park. That was about an hour after the end of the Dream Team's game at the nearby Georgia Dome. Even athletes, who normally move quickly through their entrance, were subjected to thorough searches this moming. A security guard passed a handheid metal detector over Jackie Joyner-Kersee's body as she entered Olympic Stadium.

Denis Oswald, a member of the International Olympic Committee and president of FISA, the international rowing association, said his Olympic car was searched and soldiers went through his bag.

Judy van Ruiten of Lithonia, Georgia, said she and her son, Peter, debated about coming to the rowing finals, but decided they would be safe.

"If I had in my mind that that would happen, you would never go anywhere, do anything," she said. "You just have to trust to the best and hope."

Susan Foad of England said she, her husband and their two young children still planned to go to Centennial Park after the rowing finals finished

"I just said to my husband, 'They're not going to do it again,"'said Foad, who has been here all week. "It's a surprise because the security has been good everywhere we've been."

Matt Ghaffari, who won the silver medal Tuesday in heavyweight Greco-Roman wrestling, said as an athlete, he was disgusted by the attack.

"I want to go to the hospital and take my medal and some pins 10 make people happy," the Colorado Springs resident said. "I can't tell you how sad 1 am. I'm ashamed as a person, as a human being."

Bet. Jerusalem to play Norway's Bodo in UEFA Cup

ORI LEWIS

BETAR Jerusalem appeared to have been given relatively easy opponents - on paper, at least - for its UEFA Cup second preliminary round he in the draw which was held in Geneva on Friday.

The Jerusalemites, who stormed past Floriana of Malta 8-2 on aggregate in the firt preliminary round last week, will face Bodo/Glimt of Norway in the two-leg tie. The first match is to be held in Jerusalem on August 6, with the return leg in Norway, on August 20.

While information on the Norwegians is very sparse, the Jerusalemites, should already make sure they pack eye masks for the journey to Scandinavia, as Bodo, a university town on the northeastern fjords of the North Sea, is a part of the Land of the Midnight Sun, slightly south of the North Pole region, and at this time of the year falling asleep at night will be difficult.

Indeed, the Norwegians, should they wish to do so, could easily schedule the match for midnight, and they wouldn't even need to turn on the floodlights.

One of the main advantages the Norwegian club has over their Israeli opponents is that it is currently in mid-season, while in Israel the 1996-97 league is yet to begin.

The Norwegian season got underway in April, and after nine rounds of play. Bodo/Glimt was lying in 10th place in the 14-league first divi-

The match at Teddy Stadium on August 6 will be the first of three matches for Israeli clubs in Europe during the week. The following day, Maccabi Tel Aviv hosts Fenerbahce of Turkey with the second leg to be played on August 21. On August 8 Ironi Rishon Lezion plays away against Constructrol of Moldova, that return leg will be played in Israel on August 22.

The raffle to determine the winners of The Jerusalem Post's Jewish Olympics Trivia Quiz will be held LIVE on Channel 1's IBA news on Friday, August 2 at 4:30 pm. The winners' names will be published In the August 4 edition of The Jerusalem Post.

THE 500-stroog Cantors. Assembly of North America, founded in 1947 and dedicated to the creation, restoration and preservation of Jewish music. has been having its congress in Jerusalem along with the North American Choir Festival. Now they want to share with us.

"Hallel L'Yerusbalsyim," a song of praise for the city's 3,000th birthday, will rise from the throats of some of the world's most famous cantors as they sings of Jews' longing and love for the Holy City. Performers include Alberto Mizrachi, David Propis, Shimon Farkash, Louis Danto and Saul Zim who'll sing his own "Israel's Prayer." Menashe Lev-Ran conducts the Ra anana Symphonette. In the Henry Crowo Auditorium tonight at 2:30.

CLASSICAL MUSIC

MICHAEL AJZENSTADT

TODAY'S afternoon concert at the Kfar Bhum festival focuses on the Schubert cycle, with additional works by Hoffmann, Beethoven, Ries and Hummel (5). The evening's concert (9) presents chamber music, compositions by Rameau, Chausson, Henze, Takemitsu, Debussy, Schumann, Dvorak and Brahms. Tomorrow's afternoon concert is devoted to Brahms's circle with works by Raff, Reinecke, Goetz, Goldmark, Joachim and Clara Schumann, while tomorrow's evening concert is devoted almost entirely to Bach with his Der Kunst der Fuge in a new version by Yoav Talmi, Also on the program is Beethoven's Dic Grosse Fuge.

Tonight's master class of the Israel Vocal Arts Institute summer program is given by Sherrill Milnes at the Israel Music Conservatory in Tel Aviv (7).

about three guys (all sporting bad haircuts) and three gals io the Big Apple, who drink a lot of coffee and are "there" for each other through myriad disappointments in love and career. For a long time, the show was just a ome-passer between Seinfeld - also about the joys of hanging out, but plotlessly post-modem - and workplace drama par Then, despite the show's insistent cuteness and mugging-as-acting, something funny happened. Actually, a lot of funny things happened, and even a reluctant viewer was laughing out loud. Really loud. Now, with the formulaic Seinfeld losing its edge, and E.R. getting bogged down in Dr. Lewis's private woes, Friends may be the brightest 25 minutes on the air. Catch it at 9:15 p.m. on the Family Channel, followed by the final episode in the current season of E.R. at 9:40, so long to warm up to Friends, the Gen-X comedy

If you're not all that anxious to find out if Susan Lewis gets over losing her niece, or if Nurse Hathaway will stick by her medic boyfriend now that she's had to cover up for him. or if philandering Doug Ross has finally found a woman he wants to stick with, etc., etc., flip over to BBC World at 10:05 for a physician of a very different kind. In the first of his series Insanity, Dr. Jonathan Miller - one-time revue performer, director, telephilosopher and MD - explores the concept of madness through case histories and literature. If you'd rather watch E.R. to the bittersweet end,

Gov't steps up privatization planning

DAVID HARRIS

PRIME Minister Binyamin Netanyahu, Finance Minister Dan Meridor and Bank of Israel Governor Jacob Frenkel are expected to meet this week in an attempt to finalize proposals for structural changes in the economy. This will be the third such session since last Sunday.

Ahead of the meeting all three are remaining silent about the detailed contents of its agenda, but it is known the key area which has discussed in recent days has been the demonopolization of some of the country's biggest govemment companies.

It is now widely assumed that means Israel Electric Company, the Egged and Dan bus companies and Bezeq, the telecommunications firm will be the first to have their sectors opened up to competition. The final stages of preparation are now being completed for the establishment of a 'Privatization Authority' within the Prime Minister's office, which is likely to swallow up the functions of the Government Companies Authority whose head, Tamar

Meanwhile, even before the final meeting on structural changes between Netanyahu, Meridor and Frenkel the Histadrut is warning it will take further suike action if the plans for such structural changes go ahead. "We know they won't take any nodce of what we have to say, but we are waiting for them," said Histadrut Chairman Amir Peretz's media adviser. Yossi Libovitch.

Court considers more delay in petition against Horev appointment

EVELYN GORDON

THE state on Friday requested yet another delay in the petition against the recent appointment of indictment, and at that point Col. Moni Horev to head the IDF Officers' Training School, to give Attorney-General Michael Ben-Yair time to decide on Horev's Horev appealed this decision to Ben-Yair.

"They cannot come every two weeks to request additional ome," Shraga said. "The matter has to end... In our opinion, as long as request that he cancel the indictthe indictment [against Horev] stands, he should not be in this The petition was filed by Masoud and Aliza Shoshan, whose son Yanai was killed in a position."

Nitzan said the issue was very sensitive, because if Horev were suspended, he would have to be permanently replaced, as he has no deputy to fill in for bim. When Domer pointed out that he would have the same problem during the trial – which is expected to be a lengthy one, with more than 75 prosecution witnesses - Horev's attomey responded that he had no intention of attendiog the trial, except to give his own testimony. Domer expressed surprise at this lack of interest in the indictment, as she had at previous hearings. At the last hearing, she noted that Horev had made no attempt to fight the indictment until the petition was filed - at which point, apparently feeling his professional status threatened for the first time, he began to fight it tooth and nail. Domer's decision - to consider the request for a month's delay, and give her decision at a later date - disappointed the many bereaved parents in attendance.

Where is the justice? There is no justice! We want justice!" said Masoud Shoshan. "Such a thing [as Horev's continuing in his post] is inconceivable."

Before the bearing, the bereaved parents and Horev's own support group - 16 reserve officers who serve uoder him, who came to protest the court's involvement in the case - had several altercations.

The ones who should make this decision (on Horev's suitability] are the army authorities," said Lt.-Col. Itai Landsberg-Nevo, adding that pections such as these simply encourage officers not to cooperate in army investigations. "We as a society must decide who is running this army."

"A question like this cannot be decided in a civilian court, and not by bereaved parents," he added though he said he saw nothing wrong with Horev going "outside the system" to ask the attorneygeneral to cancel his indictment. This position provoked an angry response from the parents.

Labor group calls on Peres to remain party leader

A GROUP of Labor MKs who support party chairman Shimon Peres have launched a move to postpone the party's leadership showdown until 1999, a year before the next Knesset elecdons

MKs Yossi Beilin, Mosbe Shahal, Dalia Itzik, Shlomo Ben-Ami, Yael Dayan, Ephraim, Oshaya, Sofa Landver and Shalom Simhon convened for brunch at MK Rafi Elul's home . in Mazkeret Batya Friday to discuss Peres's political future.

They maintained that if the leadership elections are held in a year's time, as required by the party constitution, the person elected might not be the most suitable candidate by the next Knesset elections.

The move, which serves the interests of supporters both of Peres and MK Haim Ramon, is arousing controversy among those in the party who want a new leadership. MK Micha Goldman attacked it as going back to the old camp regime, while MK Yossi Katz said "the attempt to resuscitate the Peres.camp is bound to fail. The party's recovery is conditional on putting a new generadon at its leadership."

The longer Peres stays at the party helm, it is. agreed in Labor, the barder it will be for Barak, who has announced bis intention to contend for the leadership, to gain power both within the party and amongst the public. Beilin said that Labor's leader and candidate for prime minister should be elected "towards" the year 2000. We must choose the persoo who will be most popular and have the best chances of defeating the Likud at that ome. If Peres chooses to, he can contend too," Dalia Itzik criticized all those who "try to" attack Peres at every opportunity and kick him. . It's demeaning and insulting. Actually we are lucky. How many people like Peres are there, in Israel or in the world? Why must he be asked to go?"

Peres, who mer hundreds of cheering Labor youths at Rabin Square on Friday afternoon, said be still has "plenty of time to think whether to cootend for the party leadership again or not. I intend to adhere to the party's constitution which says a leader must be elected by the middle of 1997. In February, Labor's convention will be held, and anyone who wishes will run,"

At Labor's executive meeting today, Peres will set op a number of teams which will follow the government's activities and react to them, as a variation of his initial idea of a shadow cabinet. ry, but the real "sea change" in the attitudes and fortunes of the community dates from the end of World War II to the present, according to Prof. Geoffrey Alderman.

"Roughly, we have a situation in which the religious extremes are gaining at the expense of the center, while at the same time the whole is contracting," the Oxfordbred academic said.

Alderman, who is Orthodox, is the foremost historian of contemporary Anglo-Jewry, and an independent - if not heretical - voice, who frequently maddens the Jewish establishment but is nevertheless tecognized for his thorough research and trenchant analyses. The "shrinking whole" is reflected in the numbers. There are about 300,000 "self-identifying" British Jews. Alderman noted, down from more than 400,000 in the 1960s.

"If the baredim were to project graveyard space, the number would be about 250,000, and if a future Fuchrer were to decide on how many Jews to burn, the fig-ure would be 500,000," he said.

"We are now shrioking at the rate of 1 percent per year, due to emigradon, mainly to Israel, assimilation, and, foremost, contraception," Alderman observed during an interview in his London home. The beleaguered center is represented by three main establishment iostitudons: The United Synagogue, consisting of most of the country's nominally Orthodox Ashkenazi synagogues; the chief rabbinate; and the Board of Deputies, which speaks on behalf of the community to the government and in other secular matters. All three insotutions are increasingly discredited. Aldernian maintains, harassed on the right by the haredim and on the left by the Reform, Liberal and more recently the Masorti (Conservative) synagogues, as well as the feminist movement. "As a result, there is no such thing as the 'Jewish community.' Alderman said. "We have separate communities, that occasionally intersect, and war with each other most of the time."

At the end of World War II, England was home to the largest and most influential Jewish community in Europe, but no more; France now has more Jews.

Alderman says that by the middle of the 21st century, "there will still be a recognizable Jewish presence in Britain, but it will be very small. It will be centered in London and Manchester and will be characterized by extreme segmentation."
